NO BRAINS

Story and Direction
by
TOM BUCKINGHAM

Harry is being chased by the sheriff - and he takes refuge in a large shipping crate. He is sent to a far-away city, and there he begins looking for work.

While looking through the want-ads he wins the enmity of a burly, lion-faced young brute. Together they go for the same job. However, Harry obtains it through various brainless methods - and is doing splendidly. Then, along comes the big brute, and Harry has the time of his life dodging him. Up and ^{down} then elevator shafts they go, one after the other. In the end Harry runs the elevator through the roof, and at the same time wins the daughter of his employer.

Married life changes Harry, and father-in-law places a Son sign after his own. Thus, Harry wins fame, fortune and happiness - with no brains.
